

introduction to the architect.

Professor at the University of Minnesota Art School: "Hardenbergh, why don't you use a larger sheet of paper instead of trying to put all this information on one sheet as if you were drawing postage stamps?"

The father of the architect, Clarence Hardenbergh to Collis Hardenbergh in 1935 when Collis driving as both to work go downtown to work: "You're not really lazy, Collis, only where you're not interested; you're a very hard and thorough workman when interested."

the architect: "It ain't Wright or Corbu, they did alot of ~~crap~~ <sup>good</sup> stuff, but they did alot of crap. It's Mies who's the greatest." and GROPPIUS. AND PHILLIP JOHNSON'S

"I am Mr. post and beam."

"I am the greatest site-fitter in the world."

"Listen, kiddo. the whole of architecture is 'simplicate and → 'make lighter.' no '→ and add make more lighter.' no. it's → 'SIMPLICATE AND ADD MORE LIGHTNESS.' That's Bucky Fuller and he's great."

"I spend more time with clients talking and analyzing, try to dig out a PROBLEM, so i can get to work."

ARCHITECTURE FORUM circa 1940: "There is no such thing as genius in Architecture. Finest architecture is only created with the most painstaking analysis."

the architect: "No i don't get along with my clients. All of the really great work I have done, the clients never asked me to do it again. It's the stupid remodeling that brings people back to me."

"They love my buildings but they hate my guts."

"Architecture is what gets built. Pretty picture of unbuilt work is only art."

"You gotta compromise in order to get build anything."
